

In another dimension, an alien race opens a door within space/time, not knowing just where that door opens. In Crestport, Maine, strange occurrences begin, culminating in contact between the two species; contact that is overshadowed by disastrous initial circumstances through a tragic sequence of events. As the two cultures overcome initial suspicions and begin to learn of each other, they discover an ominous third intelligent species, from the very dawn of time, trapped in the netherworld between the two dimensions and bent on escaping. Fast paced and gripping with an ending that will leave one spellbound.

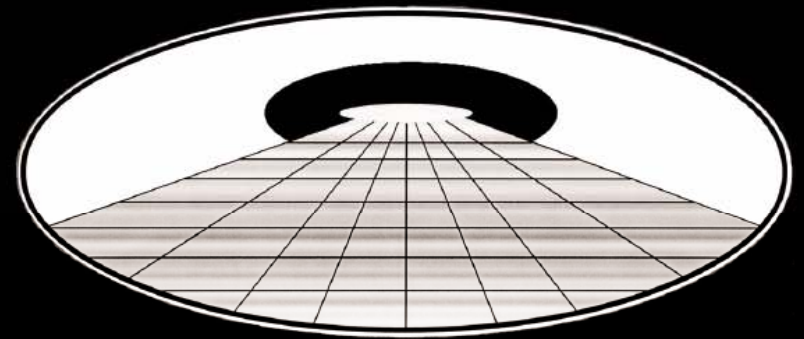

Stu Neal was born in Maine, growing up within the local culture and acquiring a love of the outdoor opportunities that abound within the State. He has spent most of his life as an entrepreneur and businessman, while doing so becoming active in his community through participation in numerous civic organizations and boards, and as an elected official within town government. Disc, Mr. Neal's first novel, was begun in 1991 while still living in Maine and completed in 2002 after his move to Virginia, where he currently resides and works as a Director with a local college in Richmond.
